GILLESPIE IS NAMED DISTRICT ATTORNEY

Tazewell Man Wins Out in Western District Over Thomas Lee Moore—Latter Refused to Recognize Slomp-Martin Regime.

[Special to The Times-Dispatch.] Washington, D. C., February 17.—The appointment of Barnes Gillespie, of Tazewell, to succeed Thomas Lee Moore as district attorney for the Western District of Virginia did not come as a surprise here. It was predicted in this correspondence several weeks ago and again this week. The Republican leaders decided some time ago to endorse him.

The success of Mr. Gillespie eliminated G. G. McCall from the race for marshal, and that contest will be fought out between Messrs. Allen and Proffitt.

Moore Not Surprised. [Special to The Times-Dispatch.] Roanoke, Va., February 17.—When told to-day that the President had appointed Barnes Gillespie, of Tazewell, as United States district attorney for the Western District to succeed him, Thomas Lee Moore said that he was not surprised, and that he had expected it. When informed that the dispatch from Washington intimated that the administration's failure to reappoint him was due to his refusal to recognize the Slomp-Martin regime, Mr. Moore had nothing to say. He did not seem to be at all disappointed, and said that he would resume the practice of law as soon as his successor takes hold of the office, and that for some time past he wanted to resume his practice.

Mr. Moore has been district attorney for eight years, and during a great part of that time has made his home in Roanoke. He succeeded Judge Alderson, who held the position four years. Mr. Gillespie will have power to appoint his own assistant, and it is not believed that he will appoint S. H. Hoge, the present assistant district attorney.

Gillespie Hears News. [Special to The Times-Dispatch.] Tazewell, Va., February 17.—Barnes Gillespie received notice to-day that he had been appointed by the President as district attorney for the Western District of Virginia, vice Thomas Lee Moore, of Roanoke. Mr. Moore telegraphed his congratulations to Mr. Gillespie, and to-night Mr. Gillespie is thirty-eight years old, and is a graduate of the University of Virginia.

STUDENTS SHIPPED FOR GETTING DRUNK

But They Can't Buy Liquor, if Williamsburg Has a Dispensary, Says Mr. Peachy.

Williamsburg will have no liquor dispensary. The ancient capital of the Colony of Virginia must continue to get along for liquid refreshment on the statement of the Mayor is true, on the Adams Express Company, the steamboat and the speakeasy. After a warm debate on the subject yesterday morning before the House Committee on Counties, Cities and Towns, it was decided to pass by indefinitely the bill calling an election on the subject. This means that the committee disapproves the bill. The only way to get it out of the committee file is a motion to discharge the committee, which will not be done. Its patron, Mr. Stephenson, of James City, said that the committee's action settled the matter so far as he was concerned.

South Boston and Houston will probably get a vote on the dispensary, but whether it will be by towns or by magisterial district, is undecided. Debate on that question was not concluded. Senator Edmondson having still the floor to close the discussion, which will be concluded Tuesday morning. The petition did the work for Williamsburg. Although the advocates of the dispensary declared that their petition was signed voluntarily, and that the one in opposition was carried from house to house to get the signatures of everybody, including practically all the negroes, numbers counted never said they wanted no election, and the committee let the local sentiment rule.

Dr. Stephenson presented the matter to the committee, referring to the standing of those who had signed the petition for an election and the signed financial condition of the little city. He introduced Mayor Warburton. The Mayor asserted that all of the city officials save the clerk of the court, who had signed no petition, had signed their desire for an election on a liquor dispensary. They did not, he said, ask for a dispensary. They asked the right to vote upon it. Those on the other petition, he continued, included all the negroes save three and a number of people who were not taxpayers, and had no interest in the city.

He not only, he said, represented the city, but also the Democratic party. He introduced Mayor Warburton. The Mayor asserted that all of the city officials save the clerk of the court, who had signed no petition, had signed their desire for an election on a liquor dispensary. They did not, he said, ask for a dispensary. They asked the right to vote upon it. Those on the other petition, he continued, included all the negroes save three and a number of people who were not taxpayers, and had no interest in the city.

After this little pleasant interchange Dr. Tyler said there was nothing in the claim of financial difficulties in Williamsburg. If there was an embarrassment it was due to spending money for improvements. There appears a little deficit of $317, but in the last budget $3,000 which will not appear this year. It was unfair to force an election, he argued, because it would cause dissensions and heart burnings.

Mr. Odell, the Methodist minister in Williamsburg, was not nearly so severe. Those whose names were on the petition for prohibition, he said, represented an element which he respected. But while he would like to help the city he thought the cost would be too great. If a campaign is forced there will be divisions in churches. It is Dr. Brunk's policy to give the convalescent inmates of the insane hospital a measure of liberty, and there are at all times perhaps twenty-five of these walking the streets. They could get liquor from the dispensary through another party, "and," he added, "we people don't know how to cope with an insane person under the influence of liquor."

This ended the discussion of the Williamsburg matter.

Liquor in Halifax. The South Boston and Houston bills were taken up. The bills, which have been favorably reported in the Senate, provide for the holding of a referendum election in the two towns, but Mr. Glenn, one of the members of the House from Halifax, presented a substitute requiring that all the citizens of Bannister Magisterial District, wherein both towns are located, should participate in the election. This district voted for prohibition in the last election. Senator Edmondson represented the bills, being their patron in the Senate.

W. B. Hill said it was a surprise to him to appear before this committee. The petition had been gotten up for a referendum election with, as he understood, a majority of the voters. There had been a hearing before the Senate committee, and R. S. Barbour, representing the prohibitionists, had agreed to not oppose the measure if the election were postponed until December, which would be two years since the last vote. Mr. Barbour said that he had been speaking for himself alone, and found that his people did not want an election at all. However, it seemed that the people on the other side thought Mr. Barbour had not given them a square deal.

Rev. W. H. Reynolds said that conditions were improved since the towns went dry. He thought it right that the whole county should vote, but was willing to compromise on the magisterial district.

Mr. Maxwell, a Presbyterian minister, showed by a map that if one of the towns voted for a dispensary and the other did not, the drunks would pass two schoolhouses.

Major Edmondson was to close the debate for a town vote as against the election, but the hour of noon was at hand. The matter was postponed to Tuesday morning, when the discussion will be closed.

In a short executive session the committee decided to pass the Williamsburg bill indefinitely. This, it is understood, is the polite and parliamentary term for chloroforming a measure.
